"The prairies of the west are great places for wind," the other day remarked Charley Searles, of the Northern Pacific. "I used to have a station out in Nebraska, right out in the open prairie. and the way the wind blew was a caution. But it was a lucky wind for me. At a station about thirteen miles west my girl lived, and as I had no Sunday trains or business of any kind, I would go up there and stay over Sunday. But a livery horse from Saturday night to to see that it does not become constipated. Monday morning cost me too much money, so I rigged up a sail on an old tie car. All I had to do on Saturday night was to hoist my sail, push the tie car on the main track, and in less than an hour I was at my journey's end. For more than a year I went to see my girl every Saturday night my means of that sail car. Pretty sleek, wasn't it?"

"Yes, pretty sleek. But do you mean to say that the wind blew in the same direction every Saturday night during staying without her, and give him the all that time?"

"Of course I don't!"

RAISING COLTS ON THE FARM.

Useful Hints on the Treatment and Break ing of Colts.

Buy good young fillies or mares of which there is good proof that they are not sold by some one else because they are poor breeders or don't breed at all, and the heavier the better. Breed them to the best stallions within reach. Don't hesitate about the stallion fee, as the difference between the best and poorest is not more than five dollars to eight dollars, which is a very slight difference between the best and poorest colts. After breeding the mare work her right along carefully, feed well, but never gorge. A month or two before foaling provide the mare with a good box stall and small yard adjoining. By all means have this yard fenced with boards; turn the mare loose in the box stall at nights and in the yard days when she is not at work. A few days before and after foaling feed the mare very light, for fear of scouring the colt. Watch the colt for a few days After three or four days, if the colt appears all right, gradually raise the mare's feed to about all she will eat up clean. When the colt is a week or ten days old you may begin working the mare. Work very carefully for the first few days, and do not keep the mare from the colt for more than three hours at a time. Do not let the colt follow the mare under any circumstances, but let him remain in the box stall until he becomes used to run of the yard also. When the colt is about a month old put a few oats in the box and he will soon learn to eat. Let the mare and colt run in the pasture as soon as the grass is good. Keep them along in this way until about a month before weaning the colt, then you may take the mare out in the morning and not return her till night. Now gradually increase the colt's feed.

In about two or three weeks you may put the mare in with the colt for an hour or two in the evening, then take her out and tie her by herself, not returning her Points are a very straight back and to the colt patil the next evening. In two or three weeks your colt will be entirely weaned without feeling the shock or worrying the mare. Let the colt remain in the box stall or yard, feed two quarts of oats twice a day with a bran mash at noon three times a week. Feed plenty of good hay, water three times a day and keep salt continually before the colt Leave the colt in the yard in the spring till the grass is good. Now some bright morning take the colt with an older horse to the pasture, bring them back to the stable at night. In two or three days you may take the colt to the pasture without the horse. At night take him out a little feed, as this will keep him contented. Be sure that he has found water. Now he may remain in the pasture until the grass begins to fail, then he should have a few oats un- after suckling a lamb, she always has a til about the first of November or De-"Yes. SELECT FIRST CLASS EWES.

Three Illustrations Which Show How Important This Is.

Three pictures of sheep illustrate in a forcible way one mistake in sheep breeding that is made by very many farmers. Too many farmers say that so long as they can secure a first class ram any old ewe will ans er. This is a mistake. It would pay farmers to slaughter some of their ewes just as it would pay dairymen

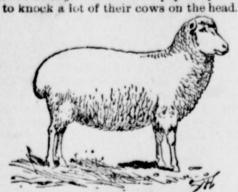

FIG. 1-POOR BREEDING EWE. Fig. 1 represents a type of ewe that is always unprofitable. Her wool is open and fluffy, giving her no protection in wet weather, and to this is due the fact that she is rarely without a running nose. Her owner states that she is decidedly lacking in motherly instincts, as she rears but indifferently the best of her the girth.

That Woolly Taste in Mutton.

The idea that the wool gives taste to the flesh, either by its growth before butchering or by its touch in butchering, or after, is a very old one, but it is erroneous. The flesh of the sheep par takes of the davor of its feed more than does that of the steer or the hog, and the milk still more, perhaps. But all the apparatus of lands and tissues for the manufacture of wool is situated in the skin, and all its deposits are made there without affecting the flesh. The disagreeable "sheepy" flavor is imparted to meat by age, by bad feeding (or no feeding at all), and by delay in the removal of viscera. Let a sheep be properly managed from birth to butchering, and the entrails taken out with neatness and dispatch, and the carcass may be wrapped in the skin without detriment, barring the uncleanliness. FARM HORSE AND DRAFT HORSE.

A Distinction That Farmers and Breeders Should Remember.

The farm horse needs a pastern of different shape from that of the draft horse proper. The pastern has an important Terms easy. office to perform. The bones serve to throw the tendon of the foot which runs over them farther from the center of motion, and more than this, act as springs to prevent concussion and absorb motion which with unusually short and straight pasterns is passed on to the upper portions of the limbs and shoulders. Hence the easy, springy, elastic motion depends mostly upon the length and obliqueness of the pastern. The dray horse needs little of this sort of motion. He is not required to go faster than a walk, and short, strong pasterns are preferred to long springy ones. But we must think something of the horses kept on the farms. Farmers are beginning to study this matter, which in the past has been greatly neglected. We have reached a point where we are forced to study it. for upon the pastern depends to a great extent the wearing qualities of the farm er's norse.

For instance, the other day I hap pened to be driving a team of grade draft mares to the buggy. One mare had two crosses of imported draft blood in her veins, the other but one. As they trotted along it was very easy to see which had the greater amount of draft blood simply by observing the top of the collar. The feet of the "three fourths" mare struck the ground with a thud much after the style of a pile driver and her pasterns being short and upright the shock was communicated to lambs. She has always been a very poor the entire front quarters, causing the milker. In form she is very light in collar to jolt up and down on her neck front, ewenecked and narrow through with every step. The other mare, an aunt of the first one, trotted along with scarcely a jar, and the motion of the superior merit. In quality she scores collar consisted entirely in accommohigh, as will be apparent in her fine dating itself to the shifting positions of the shoulders: there was no up and down

This mare's pasterns were longer and more sloping, and performed their duty of relieving the upper limbs and shoul ders from the concussion naturally caused by the feet striking the ground The one mare went with a "chug-ety chug up and down metion, the other smoothly easily and horizontally The first mare will pull more, and probably wear about as well as the other under the conditions which surround the dray horse, but she would not last at all un der the conditions which obtain on the western farm Such a mare should never be driven faster than a walk and the time is not yet when the western farmer can afford to keep work mares which cannot trot without injuring themselves. - Henry C. Wallace in Breed

Pulse of Animals.

The pulse of the horse can be most easily detected upon the lower jaw. just forward of the curved portion, where the artery crosses the cord and bone at the same time, it may also be felt, and often its pulsations seen, upon the long ridge above the eye, or may be found mside the elbow. In health it beats forty times a minute and when more rapid it denotes fever or excitement. If slower weakness. In cattle it may be found over the middle of the first rib, or in the artery upon the ankle joint and should have from fifty to fifty-five beats a min-

In sheep it is easiest found near the middle of the, inside of the thigh and should beat seventy-five to eighty times per minute. Although not included in the query, we add that the rapidity of breathing is often as indicative of disease as the pulse, and while the norse naturally breathes nine to twelve times per minute, cattle vary from eleven to fifteen times, and faster or slower indicates nearly the same thing as it does in the pulse, unless it results from overexertion. - American Cultivator.

Live Stock Points.

Every farmer can do perhaps half a dozen things well, but he cannot do a dozen. Look carefully about and see what branch of the live stock business will pay best in your neighborhood whether hogs, horses, sheep, poultry beef cattle or dairying. Then settle down to work with might and main for the success of that which you can do best. You may have other branches as best. You may have other branches as a sort of side issue, to rest yourself with, but the man who succeeds thoroughly is bound to confine his labor to a few things. This is the age of specialization.

Hear what L. S. Coffin says in The Breeder's Gazette: "I know (make that know' very emphatic) that running on the same pasture in summer, on the same feed in winter, a high grade Shorthorn steer will bring me from 50 to 100 per cent, more net profit than the comper cent. more net profit than the common native or scrub.

In testing cows for milk, or different breeds of animals for any purpose whatever, remember that they must be of the same age, or the test is no good. Young animals must always eat for growth and fattening too; old ones only for fatten Remarkable Energy Displayed by a Laborer Who Was Anxious for a Home. Edward Pullen is a young engineer and man of family, who for several years has worked in one of the down town factories. He came here from the to work at very moderate wages indeed.

east several years ago and settled down For years he paid rent out of his scanty earnings, but nine months ago he determined to try and purchase a home for his little family. It was in carrying out this purpose that he accomplished one of the most amusing and at the same time novel feats probably ever performed in the building line. Mr. Pullen told his story to a reporter who visited

He purchased a lot near Newbury, on the Berkeley line, about nine months ago, securing it at a cut price upon the condition that he would build on it a house to cost not less than $1,200. The young engineer paid his first installment of $60 and then looked about for some means of building on his acquisition. His meager salary of $12 a week was scarcely self supporting, but out of it he managed to save $50. He designed roughly the plan of a house to contain a the last moment the captain decided to basement, a story of three rooms and a second story of two rooms. A carpenter was hired for $50 to erect a mere skeleton or frame without steps, windows or roof, or in fact anything except the bare walls, and entirely unfloored and unfinished on the inside.

Then commenced Pullen's wonderful exhibition of pluck and patience. He built a temporary kitchen of rough boards close to the frame, put a stove on the bare ground, projected a piece of stovepipe through the roof and set up a habitation there for himself and family.

He works in the city from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m. In the night, after 7 o'clock, by fierce a glance. He dropped his dull gray candle light, he labored until morning almost with hammer and saw to make his modest home habitable. Out of his scanty wages he appropriated every possible dollar to the purchase of planks, pipes, nails. windows, doors and other building materials. He laid the floors plank by plank; tacked canvas across the window gaps to keep the chill night winds from his little ones, and took across the bay on his shoulders every picket and plank that now form his home. By degrees the house took form. the windows were placed in position. the glass panes put in pantries made and pumps erected. The walls and ceilings of the rooms were covered with heavy duck canvas sized with glue and varnished into a resemblance to real plaster. Picket by picket the fences were built, until now young Pullen has nearly completed his heroic task

All Lorin and Newbury were acquainted with his curious enterprise. and he was often seen on his roof far into the night hammering away at shingles and erecting chimneys. In the midst of his work the former owner of the property came around and was angry because Pullen had, as he thought, broken his contract as to the erection of a $1,200 house. Pullen paused in driving a picket to calmly answer that he "hadn't got done building yet," and that he thought that by the time the house was finished it would have cost

Night after night the young homemaker crossed the ferry with a bundle of pickets or a joint of pipe, and thus. with interludes of a few hours sleep. nightly he hammers away. Thus far he has expended in all about $250, and he owns by all odds the cheapest house in California. -San Francisco Chronicle.

MET HALF WAY.

He was the man who came last to ship as seaman aboard the Warrior, as she lay in the harbor. A fine two masted schooner was the vessel, and Captain Scudder was properly proud of her as she lay alongside the wharf receiving cargo and passengers. She was to sail with twenty souls upon her-seventeen men, two women and a lady's maid. At augment his crew by one man more. Ere he made a move to engage one, he heard a man's voice saying:

He turned and faced the speaker, who was a tall, gaunt fellow of thirty years or thereabout, with such diffidence of manner as required some courage in him to look the captain squarely in the face, when the latter gruffly said:

"I'm the captain." The man stood still in an awkward attitude under the captain's stern gaze as if unable to find speech before so eyes to the deck and doffed his now shapeless hat, and spoke, after a gulp, in a low voice that slightly trembled:

The captain studied the applicant's appearance in detail. A homely fellow he was, with an unhealthy brown hue to his skin, a forehead into which some lines of sorrow had been wrought, roving eyes that met one's glance with a slightly startled look. a haggard face without whiskers, a receding chin, bent shoulders and a graceless way of wearing his faded and frayed attire. "Often as a passenger, sir. I know I'm not a seaman, but I'll do anything. I want to get back to my people.'

"You look strong enough: but why do you hang your head like that? One would think you were a coward."

"I am." said the man, in a low voice. "What! and you admit it?"

"Yes. Why not? I've fought hard against it, but I can't help it. I make up my mind to be brave enough, but when the time comes for it I'm afraid."

The captain had never met such a character as this before, and he was interested. A few other loungers on the wharf stopped to overhear the conversation, their attention first being attracted by the great height of the man.

Now the position of the vessel was this: Where Sandy point drops beneath the sea it does not end, but it is prolonged under the water, making thus a try raising. It is cheaper to raise the perilous sandbar. Out upon this bar was the Warrior. The island tide from the east and from the west meet here. There is no more terrible place in a gale than that where two seas collide.

The storm grew. Such was the work of wind and sea that times were when the sandbar from the shore to the vessel was swept naked. But its nudity was

A Riddle Making Epoch.

There have been epochs at which riddle making has been more especially in vogue, and such epochs would appear to occur at seasons of fresh intellectual awakening. Such an epoch there was at the first glimmering of new intellectual light in the second half of the Seventh century. This was the age of cers with the air of a street arab, and like a man paralyzed. POULTRY AND GARDENING.

The Two Fit Together Like Roast Lami and Mint Sauce.

Along with the poultry raising every one should run a garden, for two reasons: First, nearly half of the feed for the chickens in summer comes from the garden; and second, the poultry manure ought to be sufficient fertilizer for such a garden on ordinary soil. The poultry droppings should be gathered at least weekly from the hen roost or the yard and sprinkled over with fine dust. The best plan is to take every barrel of this mixture and dump it into a quantity of muck gathered from some pond near by. Mix the two up thoroughly, and a good "Aye, but there's one chance," shouted fertilizer is prepared both for spreading the coward, who now loomed up large over the ground and for dropping in the trogenous material, decayed roots and plants. Lambing

Now is about the time of year when The people on the vessel watched him lambs commences, and I wish to say to with waking hope and cessation of any of your readers who may have breath. The hundreds of islanders on wrongminded sheep that disown their shore stood silent, thrilled, eager. No offspring that there is a sure cure for it and not patented.

The cure is to feed the ewe plenty of good hay and grain for at least two months before she lambs

If a ewe has fat on her ribs and udders full of milk she will own her lambs nineturbulent high sea moved in pursuit of ty-nine times out of a hundred, and this him. Where many lambs come in the same The ocean won. With a great roar it pen at the same time, young ewes frewill be overcome.

When a ewe disowns her lamb it is in most every case because she has very look out for number one.

Many people do not realize when a sheep is thin in the winter or spring, Lve Lexington. simply because of the heavy covering of wool that covers up sharp angles to some degree, and think it doesn't need much care and feed, but can get the principal part of its living as a sort of all around scavenger: but the fact is that no animal will so quickly and surely no animal will so quickly and surely repay the thoughtful owner in cash for his careful attention and liberal allowance of the best water, hay and grain, and no animal will be a poorer investment than a half starved sheep.

I once had the misfortune to fatten for mutton fifty old Merino ewes that had all taken the ram, although unknown to me. I raised forty-nine lambs, and the ewes were about as fat as corn and alfalfa hay could make them at the Huntington and Morehead Accommodations time they dropped, and I kept them so until green grass came, the lambs growing meantime full as fast as they would have done upon grass.

Nature very seldom makes a mistake, and a strong, healthy, fat ewe will guard her lamb as carefully as a mother will her child. If a man can't afford to feed two sheep well, let him keep but one .-J. H. Rosenkrans in American Sheep Breeder.

Some New York Stock.

At the Hornellsville fair Mr. Lyon showed an 8-year-old Jersey bull that furnishes motive power for drawing hay, helping the team up hill and taking either horse's place in case of accident. He has a horse collar fitted to him and with iron hames and chain tugs drew 4,300 pounds on a pair of trucks. He weighs 1,640 pounds. Some Cheshire pigs shown by A. W. Crandall were extra. The old sow was a model for a painter. She has given birth to sixty pigs in four litters and received five first premiums. The Cheshire is in my opinion the best hog for growth, disposition and easy keeping that can be found.—C. E. C. in Bural New Yorker.

OF STANFORD, KY.

Capital Stock $200,000 Surplus 18,500

Attention of the public is invited to the fac that this is the only National Bank in Stanford Under the provisions of the National Bank Act Under the provisions of the National Bank Act depositors are secured not only by the capital stock, but by the stockholders' hability for an amount equal to the stock, so that depositors of this institution are secured by a fund of $400,000. Five sworn statements of the condition of the bank are made each yearto the United States government and its assets are examined at stated times by government agents, thus securing additional and perfect safety to depositors.

This institution, originally established as the Deposit Bank of Stanford in 1858, then re-organized as the National Bank of Stanford in 1865 and again re-organized as the First National Bank of Stanford in 1882, has had practically an uninterrupted existence of 32 years.
